

MANY A FISH IN THE BIG SEA YET

INTERESTING LOT OF FISH STORIES FROM THE SOUTH.

WHAT ONE DAY'S SPORT IS

All Are Not Good Eating, But Some Are Very Fine—Best of Sport.

Cleveland, Fla., March 17, 1935.

For the Gazette:

The first large fish of the season was caught yesterday by Mr. George Cahoon assisted by several members of the party. He started out at 8:30 in the morning with a man to handle the boat for him and in 20 minutes was anchored on the tarpon grounds at the entrance to Alligator pass, a mile above the house and down the bay.

Less than half an hour after the bait was cast, the line commenced to play out and it was evident that something was doing. After a reasonable time the fish was hooked and then the work commenced.

The fact that he did not come to the surface indicated right away that it was not a tarpon, but whether it was a shark or a black sea bass remained to be seen, as both are very common in these waters, although the former are seldom landed as they usually bite off any kind of a snail that has yet been discovered.

Whatever was at the other end of the line it handled like a log and for an hour and a half Mr. Cahoon worked with him in a vain effort to get him to the surface. The fish sulked like a hog and would frequently lie on the bottom for ten minutes and refuse to budge. The slender line, not larger than common cotton twine, required skillful handling to prevent breaking, but the man at the other end was not a novice, and the fight was a test of skill against brute force.

At 11 o'clock it was decided that a spear and more help was needed, so the line was played out its entire length, detached from the reel and fastened to a float, while the man was dispatched to the house for the necessary help.

Soon every boat was on the way to the scene of action. The float was picked up about 1,000 yards from the starting point and with the line again secured to the reel, active business was resumed.

At 12 o'clock Mr. Cahoon was well exhausted with his morning's work and Mr. Bailey assumed command. The fish seemed to take on new life and made a start up Shell Creek, with the party in hot pursuit. After a mile or more had been covered he was worked into shallow water and landed with a gaff hook.

He proved to be a few fish or black sea bass and when three or four men had pulled him out on the beach it was plain to be seen that he was capable of furnishing the four hours' entertainment which had just closed.

By the aid of a gaff hook he was pulled into a boat and brought to the house, where he was hung on a trestle and photographed with various surroundings by Miss Greenman and Miss Conaghan, the artists of the party. The fish measured 6 ft. 3 in. in length and had a girth of 55 inches. He weighed 283 pounds and beats the record for this class of fish on the west coast of Florida. His mouth was large enough to take in a ten-year old boy with room to spare. The Gazette will produce a picture of the fish in a few days, to verify the story.

The flesh of these large salt water fish is coarse and not very palatable, but the natives carried away 100 pounds of steak before the carcass was towed out to the channel and sent adrift.

The rule for determining the weight of fish in this country is novel, and yet so reliable that it is absolutely accurate. Square the girth, multiply by the length, and divide by 800. This applies to all kinds of fish and the weight will be within a few ounces.

The party from Cuba returned yesterday and report a pleasant trip. Miss Greenman had the pleasure of meeting Mrs. Feltner while shopping in Havana.

The month of March in southern Florida resembles the north so far as wind is concerned, with the cold left out. The temperature varies from 50 to 85 with plenty of rain. The Janesville party will leave for home in about a week, taking in Jacksonville and St. Augustine by the way. The outing has much to recommend it. This land known as the sunny south must be seen to be appreciated and the more one sees of it the more content will be with the north and an occasional blizzard.

NEW YORK PRICES ARE FLUCTUATING

Prices Vary with the Machinments of Foreign Countries of the Money.

The events of the week, although transitory in character, were chilling to the ardor of the bulls. Two things of importance transpired—pronounced Japanese successes in the far east, resulting in an almost complete rout of the Russian Manchurian army, and an unexpected stiffening of money rates in New York. Both were factors deterrent to further advance in prices.

Russian advances were looked upon with equanimity. Generally it was felt that they must in the long run prove a bullish argument, and particularly so when it was learned that the new Russian loan in Paris had been postponed. Paris, to protect her Russian investments, sold securities in London, and London, to restore equilibrium, sold in the New York market. It seems probable a change of speculative position in regard to American securities has occurred in English and Continental markets. London, until the past few days, was bullish to the extent that the London market became practically bare of the high-grade American securities. Later developments of the week showed heavy foreign purchases for long account. This buying augurs well for an advance in prices when the temporary influence of unsettling events has passed, and when Japanese successes show their true import in placing prices on a more substantial pedestal.

On Wednesday money rates advanced unexpectedly 4 on the treasury department's call on the banks for $15,000,000 Government deposits. This was considered a temporary influence on the market as lending bankers say any continuance of the increased rate in New York would quickly be followed by an overflow of money to this center and that no permanent stiffening of call money rates should be feared at the moment.

Appropos of the renewed advance in Ontario and Western the probability is that the New York, New Haven & Hartford, which controls the majority of the Ontario & Western stock, will make an offer for the minority stock in order the more easily to take over the company's coal lands, and make favorable traffic arrangements for the shipment of coal so obtained. The Ontario & Western will probably ultimately find lodgment in the hands of the New York Central. This would restore harmony to the trunk line situation, as it is felt that New Haven by its ownership of Ontario & Western is now trespassing on Trunk Line territory.

Harriman interests are said no longer to look with favor on wild speculation in Union Pacific. They did not, of course, own the property outright, or even a controlling interest, but depended on the proxies of friendly stockholders for the continuance of their administrative authority. During the succession of sharp advances that culminated two weeks ago in the highest point at which Union Pacific ever sold, the Harriman interests are said to have made the rather alarming discovery that many friends on whose proxies they depended had been steadily liquidating their holdings. Some very good selling on advances this week have been ascribed to Harriman interests.

No further announcements were forthcoming as to the much talked of New York Central-Union Pacific-Norfolk merger, although generally it was to such a development that the advance of New York Central to 107½ was credited. Despite official denials the story has been persistently circulated to lack some foundation in fact.

Indications would seem to point to a continuance of uneasiness, until Russia's attitude toward peace negotiations and the outlook for money become more clearly defined. Stocks, however, are in strong hands, and big interests are almost uniformly optimistic. In the long run the trend of prices will probably be upwards.

Yours very truly,

J. S. BACHE & CO.

Water Ordinance Passed
Alderman Matheson called for the third reading of the ordinance which so amends the city water-works franchise as to permit that company to connect with automatic sprinklers used for inside fire protection in factories, without assuming responsibility for any failure of pressure due to operation or breakage of the same, and moved that it be placed on passage. Alderman Jackson asked to be excused from voting and the request was granted. The ordinance was adopted, all the remaining business voting "Aye."

Settled for Injuries

By a resolution the city clerk was instructed to draw orders on the city treasurer payable from the general fund for $100 and $25 to be tendered respectively to Mary Kentling in full settlement for injuries sustained on July 23 last, and Margaret Carney for injuries sustained on January 23, both being due to alleged defective sidewalks. Hans Gilbertson was granted permission to move a house from the Smith, Bailey & Stone addition to the railroad addition; and E. S. Loveland, a house from Smith, Bailey & Stone's addition to Mitchell's fourth addition.

For Furnishing Light

The lighting committee was instructed to call for sealed proposals, to be submitted on the 24th of April, for furnishing the city with illumination "dispensed by" from 100 to 200 electric lamps of 1,200 candle power, for a period of five years. The same committee was also directed to advertise for bids for furnishing the city with 100 incandescent gas lamps during the next five years. Alderman Matheson wanted the lighting committee to take some action regarding the placing of a light at the corner of Wall and Madison streets, the request having been made many months ago. He thought it was dangerous to allow the locality to remain dark, it being in the vicinity of the Five Points. Committee members intimated that there were other dark and dangerous places in the city but that there was only enough cash on hand in the fund to carry the city through with the present lights.

Tried to Reduce Salary

Alderman Grove offered a resolution the intent of which was to repeal the measure passed on Feb. 20, fixing the salary of the city clerk at $1,000, and re-establish the same at the old dimensions of $1,600. Alderman Jackson moved that Alderman Grove's measure be laid on the table and it was so disposed of, the sponsor alone voting against such procedure. The pay-roll and the usual bills were passed upon and the report of the city treasurer for February was received and placed on file. A proposition from a Chicago concern which builds a street sweeper that is guaranteed to operate successfully on 90,000 square feet of pavement an hour and can be run by a 12-year-old boy, seemed to merit investigation and the clerk was directed to write for further particulars. A brick crosswalk on Chatham street on the north side of Elizabeth was ordered built as soon as weather conditions warranted it.

WOOL MARKET

BY ELMER BULLARD Dealer in Wool. Evansville, Wis.

March 21.—Conditions unchanged. Demand for wool very slow the past week. Wools in storehouses can be bought at a good deal less price than last January, and yet the manufacturers will not stock up to any extent, as they consider wools too high. The sheep and lamb market has declined one dollar per hundred pounds, in the last 30 days, probably on account of the break in wool lessening the value in pelts. At the present there is a little firmer feeling, but no advance in prices. Both woolen and worsted machinery is well occupied, and has been all winter. About twice as much wool was bought direct by the mills in the United States from Australia this season than usual. The Argentine season is practically over at Buenos Ayres.

Mohairs are affected by the wool situation. In the export-yarn branch, business is demoralized. The collapse in the wool market has taken some of the steam out of the dress goods market for the time being. Ohio and Pennsylvania fleeces are fairly active. Michigan fleeces are dull and nominal. Territory wool steady. Some demand for fine and half blood.

CLOSING NUMBER OF Y. M. C. A. COURSE

The Hearons Sisters' Concert Company Delighted Large Audience Last Evening—Versatile Artists.

Patrons of the Y. M. C. A. winter course thoroughly enjoyed the closing entertainment given by the Hearons Sisters' Concert Co. last evening. The versatility of the artists and their grace in execution on a large number of stringed instruments as well as the dash and spirit with which the orchestral ensembles were played, delighted all. Miss Winifred A. Hearons proved a delightful reader.

Mrs. A. Keyes Allen

The closing of a beautiful Christian life came February 10th, at Highland Park, Ill., when Anna Field Allen closed her eyes in peaceful slumber, aged eighty-five years. Mrs. Allen was the eldest daughter of Lucius Field, who came from Brooklyn, N. Y., some time before 1850. Mr. Allen's father was one of five brothers who named "Allens Grove" and settled there in 1845. Mr. and Mrs. Allen moved to Highland Park in 1877, where Mr. Allen died in 1878. A son, Charles S., died in Janesville, April 21st, 1896, aged 23 years, from disease contracted while enduring untold sufferings at Andersonville. He was an "exchange prisoner." A sister, Mrs. Abby Field Harding, resides in Chicago, and two brothers, Hubbard Field in Seattle, Wash., and Cornelius N. in Brooklyn, N. Y. Two brothers, Lucius and Fitch, also lived in Brooklyn. Mrs. Allen has been tenderly cared for through her declining years by her devoted cousin, Miss Sarah Patchen, who has always made her home with her, and who has many friends here.

North Street Extension

Mayor Hutchinson announced that the council was ready to hear any suggestions or protests regarding the proposed extension of North street to Jackson street. No one responded. A written petition urging that if the extension be made, it be on the line as the street now runs and the expense be met by the city and not the property-holders on North street, was read. The communication was signed by W. H. H. Macdon, Miss Anna Cravin, Catherine Cravin, Mrs. Dan Conley, and Joseph Conley. The committee asked for further time to report on the suggestions.

EMIGRATION.

Emigration from the European countries to the United States and other countries of the world is discussed at considerable length in a British publication which has just reached the department of commerce and labor through its bureau of statistics. The discussion in question is part of an elaborate document issued by the British Board of Trade, the title of the chapter which discusses emigration being, "Emigration from the Chief European Countries." The following extracts from the discussion present the more important of its conclusions, and especially those which relate to the United States:

"The migration of population from one country to another is effected by a number of complex causes. The whole volume of migration, of course, depends largely on the distribution throughout the world of density of population, climatic advantages, and wealth of natural resources, together with facilities of communication between the more and less densely settled and naturally favored regions."

"As regards the volume and direction of the movement from any particular country, much depends not only on the natural resources and field of employment, but also on the national temperament and characteristics, the standard of living of the people, and the existence in overseas countries of populations of similar or kindred character."

"So far as emigration is a purely economic movement, the main factors which determine the changes in its volume are two—the state of the labor market in the country from which the emigrant starts and the state of the labor markets to which he goes. But emigration is by no means an exclusively economic movement. Other causes, such as political or religious persecution, have operated in many well-known cases, to encourage the transfer of population from one country to others. Broadly speaking, however, the economic element in migration is usually by far the most important, and even in the case of emigration to escape burdensome laws (e. g., the Russian Jews or German Socialists), the time and direction of the movement is determined largely by changes in the labor market in overseas countries."

"A study of fluctuations in commercial activity and employment in the principal countries leads to the conclusion that among the principal advanced commercial countries the general waves of inflation and depression are to a considerable, and perhaps a growing extent, simultaneous, though the effect of these wide movements of expansion and contraction may be often complicated and disguised in the case of particular countries by purely local causes, e. g., the effect of a war or other disturbance, the discovery of gold or mineral resources, good or bad harvests, and so forth. To these local variations in the economic conditions affecting political causes already adverted to, which may tend at one time or another to stimulate or retard the migration of population."

"These considerations would lead us to expect that the total volume of emigration (say) from all European countries will follow some more or less definite law depending on the state of industrial activity in the world generally, and especially in the overseas countries which are the chief recipients of emigrants, while the flow from and to particular countries will be also affected by local and special circumstances, which in many cases may be even more important. Examples, both of the general and local factors in emigration, will be found in succeeding parts of this memorandum."

"A few of the leading results may be briefly summarized:

"Since 1876 (the first year for which the statistics of net British emigration can be given) there have been two great periods of activity in European emigration, the first beginning about 1880 and lasting for the succeeding ten or twelve years, and the second beginning about 1899 or 1900 and still continuing. Separating these periods was a period of comparative stagnation, from 1893 to about 1898. Thus the recorded emigration from the principal European countries for which continuous records are available was 590,000 in 1882; in 1894 it was only 224,000; in 1902 it had risen to 641,000. Though by no means the whole of this stream is directed to the United States, the alternating periods of inflation and depression in America have been the most potent single factor in the situation. The financial and industrial collapse of 1893 suddenly diminished the capacity of America to absorb labor. This was followed by the great increase of industrial activity which began in 1899.

"In the former of the two periods of activity Great Britain and Germany contributed large numbers of the migrants to America. In the latter period, however, these countries no longer supplied any large proportion of these migrants, who were largely contributed by Italy, Austria-Hungary, and Russian Poland. The total volume of British emigration to all destinations did not diminish in proportion to the fall in such emigration to America, but found, to some extent, other fields within the Empire. German emigration, on the other hand, has largely diminished, while that from Italy and Austria-Hungary has very rapidly increased."

"In order to bring out the great change which has taken place in recent years in the character of these sources, it is of interest to compare the two periods 1879-1882 and 1899-1902, which were the two periods of greatest expansion of immigration into the United States within the series of years covered by the table. It so happens that the total volume of increase was practically the same in the two cases, viz. 544,000 in the three years 1879-1882, and 545,000 in the four years 1899-1903, but the sources from which the increased supplies of labor were drawn differed very widely."

COL. GEO. HALL AND HIS STORY

VETERAN CIRCUS MAN PAYS THE CITY A VISIT TODAY.

TELLS OF THE GREAT FAKE

Sacred Camel Backed Horses From the River Nile—How It Ended.

"Col." George Washington Hall, the pioneer showman of the United States, still alive, was in the city this morning, coming down from his home in Evansville, Ind., to pay a few bills, he said, and greet old friends.

"Col." Hall has just returned from an interesting trip in the south, where he visited in Tampa and Atlanta. At Atlanta he met many old friends and friends of his wife, Mrs. Hall, who is now in the city. He also met the secretary of the Interior, called him not only the father of the circus business in the United States, but also the father of the zoo in Atlanta, which was started with animals which had belonged to the Hall show and is now one of the largest in the south.

Going East

"Col." Hall was smoking a big black cigar this morning that he had brought from Tampa with him. He was just down with his wife to pay the bills, he said, while she made ready for her season's work with the Harpavics circus, which starts from Philadelphia very shortly. Mrs. Hall goes with the show to exhibit a cage of leopards and jaguars, and his daughter Mabel has a performing horse act and her special act with Columbus, the largest elephant now alive, which is "Col." Hall's property. In fact, the Harpavics show in reality belongs to "Col." Hall, being simply leased to Harpavics—canvases, seats, animals, cages, wagons and all. They pay a good big rental for it and the "Col." is going on to see the show started properly.

Wagon Show

The "Col." has another daughter, Irene, or Jessie, who recently secured a divorce from McCarty, the dog and pony trainer. She is a snake charmer and is to go with the Harpavics show this year. A son, George Hall, Jr., who also makes his home at Evansville near his father, is making ready to put out a wagon show which will start from Evansville in May. He has spent the winter in buying stock and will travel through the northwest. Last season he was with the Van Amburgh show. This year he will have a show of his own.

When speaking of his three children "Col." Hall said: "Yes, everyone of them is a money-maker. Why, I tried to have them all leave the show business and go into some other business, but they would not do it."

In the South

The "Col." was in Tampa when he purchased the two million dollar plant hotel for a hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars and then sold it to another concern for a hundred and forty thousand, reserving thirteen acres for the city and also a right on ten acres more for ten years to hold the state fair on. Full of stories as to circus days of the past, "Col." Hall is an entertaining visitor. One little tale of past days in which he successfully duped the public and its denouement was interesting.

Hump-Backed Camel Horses

It seems that "Col." Hall was in Iowa one season with his show when a man came to him and offered to sell a hump-backed horse to him that resembled a camel somewhat. The "Col." purchased the animal for $35 and a little later bought another for $17.50 and later a third for $35.00. Then he hired Bruce, at that time a great show-poster painter in Brooklyn to paint him a ten-by-twelve canvas with a scene of camel-backed horses from Egypt, calling them a herd of sacred camels of the River Nile. These animals excited much comment all summer and when fall came the circus was located near a fair between Clinton and Lyons, where hundreds of horsemen of note from all over the country were assembled. The opening day of the fair and of the show a crowd of them came to the tent, saw the sacred herd of River Nile horses on the canvas and went in. Now let the "Col." tell his story:

The Wind-Up

"We had two tents up with twenty-four banners out, but these horsemen were taken by the camel-backed horses from the River Nile and inside they came. In the first tent we had a lot of curious people and the wild animals. In the next tent we had a den of wild animals, a performance and the sacred horses. Well you should have seen those horsemen's faces when they saw the camel-backed sacred horses from the Nile river. They looked at each other and then at me and then waited to see what I would say. Well, I usually had a spiel for them on the horses, so that day I made no exception, but began: 'Ladies and Gentlemen—I will next call your attention to a herd of sacred camel-horses of the River Nile.' Among the many curiosities now before the public which I have previously exhibited there are none of which I feel more proud than these specimens. They were presented to your humble servant by the Hon. Mr. Hopinickel, who has been minister to Calcutta for the last thirty years, and who takes great pride in sending back rare curiosities and specimens to his native land. I wish you to take particular notice of this camel-horse. They have seven more ribs than the ordinary horse and the side motion of a camel when traveling."

How It Ended

"Just about this time a little flat Irishman with a cutaway coat on and a gingham handkerchief about his neck broke into the spell. It has been my custom at this point to distract the attention of the audience from the horses to the cage of wild animals by announcing that 'Grizzly' Hubbard, the partner of 'Kit' Carson, would now exhibit in the lions' den. This usually did the trick, but that day the Irishman was too smart for me and he broke in. 'Be jabbers, you would have the side motion of a camel, too, if your back was broke.' Everyone laughed, and my mild sacred horses of the Nile river ended in a joke."

QUIET REIGNS AT PRIMARIES

MARKED INDIFFERENCE MANIFESTED THROUGHOUT DAY.

TOTAL VOTE AT ONE WAS 462

Aldermanic Contest in Fifth Ward and Race for Supervisor in Third, Furnish Only Excitement.

Unless a greater degree of interest is manifested in the primaries between four this afternoon and nine tonight, opponents of the idea of nominating candidates in this manner will be justified in concluding that it is a rather expensive procedure and not productive of the results claimed for it, that is to say, that the will of the people was quite as fairly expressed under the caucus system.

Not Five Hundred at One

The polls were opened at six this morning. At one this afternoon, out of the 2,800 or more voters in Jansville only 462 had taken advantage of their privileges at the primary booths. The votes in the various wards were as follows: First, 120; second, 137; third, 115; fourth, 90; fifth, 100. The second ward had the largest vote and the fifth, the smallest. The officials at the latter booth expressed their conviction that the primary was "a decided frost."

Very Little Excitement

There was some excitement. Edward J. Schmidley and John J. Dulin are making a hot race in the fifth for the democratic nomination for alderman and both had their carriages out from early morning. In the third ward there is a race between E. D. McGowan and J. L. Bear, for the office of supervisor. Otherwise the whole contest is featureless and uninteresting. No ladies appeared at any of the booths to insist upon their rights, and it was just as well—no special ballots were prepared for them.

CHARACTER COMEDY "CHECKERS" PLEASES

Thomas W. Ross Called Before the Curtain by Big Audience at Myers' Theatre Last Night.

Thomas W. Ross, appearing as "Checkers" in the spirited character-comedy presented at the Myers theatre last evening made willing captives of his big audience, and his basic sincerity and that radiant smile were large contributing factors. There were melodramatic moments in his race-track adventures and his love-making in which a less earnest, convincing and finished actor could scarcely have succeeded—moments that required the unswerving sympathy of the spectator. As it was, no one inquired into the logic of events that led to the dramatic scene at the race-track, the presence of his sweet-heart, her father and the deadly rival at the betting booth at the precise moment when he had risked on a 100 to 1 shot the lucky piece that sealed his promise to gamble no more. The play of emotions on the face, the agonized calls for the horse on which he had staked the keep-sake, became something real, and vital that cut beyond the footlights.

The cast which shared honors with him was a capable one. David Brahm, Jr., as "Push" Miller the tout, with his picturesque slang and metaphors among strangers, was a favorite and pleasing heroine. Her emotional work seemed at times a trifle over-drawn but this defect, if it was one, was easily overlooked. Charles Willard as "Uncle Jerry Halter," presented one of the most interesting character studies that has been seen on the local stage this year.

The working of the features which led to the explosive laugh, the keenness of his perception after he had been given due time to look at a matter from all angles, his bristling sublimity when one crossed his path, and the warm heart for all humanity which was reflected from his rubicund countenance when he was not following up some petty plan to "warp it" to "Barlow," all these contradictory elements in the curious little man's make-up were a constant delight. Joseph Wilkes was admirable as "Barlow" and the same may be said of Wallace Worsley who appeared as "Checkers" in the final trial.

The cake-walks and dances introduced by a group of colored entertainers during a sunset scene in the second act made a great hit and the performers were several times recalled.

Thomas Ross was called before the curtain by the repeated encores following the close of the third act. He bowed but made no remarks.

A SINGER'S GRATITUDE

Harry Bewley, Well Known Singer, Tells How Father John's Medicine Cured His Cough and Cold and Prevented Pneumonia.

"It gives me pleasure to contribute my testimony as to the benefits I have derived from Father John's Medicine. I have found it a positive cure for 'spoon run' sinuses it having been of great benefit to me in several emergencies during my professional career. At one time I had a serious cough and cold and pneumonia was threatened. By faithfully taking Father John's Medicine pneumonia was prevented. The medicine also built up my strength, increased my weight, and left my voice clearer and stronger than ever. I write these lines in a spirit of gratitude toward Father John's Medicine and with the hope that others may know of this reliable remedy."

UNIVERSITY HAS MANY NEEDS NOW

But the Courses of Study Were Never Better Than at the Present Time.

The University of Wisconsin, Lawrence university, and Ripon college have just entered into a new agreement which is regarded as a most significant one, designed as it is, to bring about a closer relation between these important institutions of higher education of the state. In accordance with this new plan, Lawrence and Ripon will adopt the fourteen unit system of admission now required by the university, and hence may make use of the university inspection and accrediting of high schools. This new agreement also makes it possible for students of Ripon and Lawrence who have completed one or two years of college work to enter the university with full credit; and graduates of these colleges, in accordance with general university policy, may enter the university as graduate students. Students and graduates of Ripon and Lawrence may also enter the university colleges of engineering and law on the same basis as students and graduates of the college of letters and science of the university. By this new arrangement it will be possible for students of these colleges to combine a general college course with a course in engineering or law, and reduce the length of the combined courses by from one to two years.

Increase in Attendance.

The second semester of the University of Wisconsin opened with an increase in attendance of 72. Of those 50 are new students, and 22 are former students who have returned to continue and complete their studies. The most marked increase is in the graduate school where twelve new students have entered, making the total enrollment of the graduate school 143, against 115 last year, an increase of 28, or over 25 per cent. Five of these new graduate students are graduates of the University of Wisconsin, and one each of Cornell university, Western Reserve university, Ohio State university, University of California, University of Missouri, Cornell college, and the University of Göttingen. Fifteen of the new students are freshmen, ten adult students, eight juniors, four seniors, and one junior law.

Four-Year Course in Music

The courses in the School of Music of the University of Wisconsin, and especially those in the piano and voice departments, have been rearranged and extended to cover a period of four years instead of three as heretofore, and the requirements for admission to the piano department have been slightly raised. This new arrangement will make it possible for the students to complete the course without difficulty in four years, and will give them the most thorough training in music.

Prof. B. H. Meyer Honored

Dr. Balthasar H. Meyer, professor of political economy at the university, has been appointed editor of the History of Transportation which is to form a part of the economic history of the United States, the compilation and publication of which has been undertaken by the Carnegie institution of Washington. It is understood that a grant of $15,000 has been set aside for the work, which will extend over a period of five years. Professor Meyer, who has made a special study of railroad transportation, and who is regarded as one of the best authorities on that subject, has just completed the collection of material for a monograph on the valuation of the ways of the United States, for the interstate commerce commission, and the United States census. He is now in Europe investigating European railway systems in relation to American railroads, and upon his return will begin at once the compilation of the history of transportation, a piece of work which will offer advanced and graduate students in political economy excellent opportunity to assist in collecting material for this monumental work.

University Girl Wins Scholarship

Miss Emma C. Jaack of Oniro, a graduate of the University of Wisconsin in the class of '02, has been awarded the Association of Collegiate Alumnae scholarship at the Willard School for American Girls at Berlin, Germany, where she will continue her study of German literature and philology begun at the university.

Co-operation of Normal Schools

A new arrangement has been made between the Wisconsin normal schools and the University of Wisconsin, which is regarded as of great importance, since it unites as closely as possible the higher educational institutions supported by the state. In accordance with the new plan, graduates of the normal schools will receive one year's credit towards the degree of bachelor of arts at the university, and those graduates who select their studies in the normal school with special reference to entering the university will receive credit for a year and a half towards that degree. A special course for normal school graduates replaces the present philosophy course, and by accrediting foreign language study done in the normal schools, and by reducing the amount of philosophy study required for the course, the university makes it possible for normal school graduates to obtain the degree of bachelor of philosophy in this course after two years' work at the university.

A ROSE OF NORMANDY

By
WILLIAM R. A. WILSON

The party started up the narrow street, Fontenac and Tont leading the way, asking and answering all manner of questions relating to the king, the court, and the army. Behind them walked La Salle (bowing now and then as he caught sight of a familiar face in the crowd), together with Barrios, the governor's secretary, and Blazir, lieutenant of his guard; Duchesneau, after responding to La Salle's greeting in a half-hearted sort of way, remaining behind to see the other passengers and receive whatever dispatches the ship had brought from the king.

The city was divided into an upper and a lower town, the former occupied by the government officials, soldiers, priests and nuns, while the latter (consisting of one long street taking up the space between the river's edge and the foot of the bluffs) was made up of the homes of traders, sailors and a few Indians and fishermen. The ascent to the upper town was made by either of two ways; the first, a passage with steps cut in the rock, while the other, over which the governor now passed, was a steep street lined with houses. As they walked slowly along, the passers-by saluted the governor with deference, and stopped to gaze at the faces of the strangers. A little beyond the Episcopal palace, Fontenac paused to gain his breath and await the arrival of the others. "A long climb, hein, mes amies? Come with me to the Chateau; you are to lodge beneath my official roof."

At seven o'clock La Salle and Tont were ushered into the apartment designated by Fontenac when he left them. The walls were of oak and the high ceiling showed the rafters blackened by the smoke that poured from the fireplace when the wind came from the northwest. Above this fireplace were hung the large, branching antlers of a moose, used as a brack by the worthy comte. A number of pictures brought from France were decorated with strings of var-colored wampum entwined about their frames, while a red blanket or a pair of moccasins were attached to the walls here and there, giving a bright touch of color to the otherwise gloomy interior. The swinging cressets that furnished from overhead a light much feebler than that emanating from the blazing logs, showed in one corner an old tarnished corselet and some steel pikes, while in another a massive carved desk and chair betrayed the official character of the room. In the center of the floor, carpeted with many skins stood a heavy, table, set with snow-white napery and polished silver. Three high-backed chairs denoted the number of the expected diners.

While waiting themselves before the fire (the autumn nights were chilly an hour after the sun went down) and gazing at the mixture of civilization and barbarism about them, Fontenac entered the room, and soon all were engaged with hearty appetites at their evening meal. They talked freely of the plans for the fur-trade that La Salle hoped to be able to build up. Fontenac, as a sort of partner in the enterprise, offered advice and gave his views frankly on all subjects discussed.

A knock at the door and a servant entered to announce that the members of the superior council were awaiting the governor's pleasure to begin the business of the meeting. Fontenac had called for the reading of the dispatches that had arrived on the "Saint Honore" and the transaction of other important business. Tont and La Salle accordingly withdrew, and the governor passed to the council chamber.

The relation of his wrongs to his friends had tended to arouse the irritability that was so prominent a characteristic of the man. On entering the room a cloud gathered on his brow, as he saw all the members of the council seated about a large table engaged in earnest conversation. No one stirred as he appeared, and it was only after his angry look that they seemed to recollect his position and accordingly arose, some of them reluctantly enough, and bowed, remaining standing until he had taken his seat.

"How now, messieurs!" he exclaimed, "do you proceed with the council's business without waiting for its chief and president?" Then not pausing for a reply, he seated himself at the head of the table, having the bishop on his right hand and the intendant on his left, and directed them to proceed to business.

Duchesneau accordingly broke the seal bearing the royal impression, and handed it to the secretary to read. All listened eagerly to learn what messages the king sent to the chief officers of his colony. The first portion, dealing with matters pertaining to the state, was attended to with a respectful interest, but it was not until the latter part was reached, which touched upon the various disputes between governor and intendant in which each member of the council had taken sides, that the interest became intense.

"M. le Comte de Fontenac," read the secretary, "we are surprised to learn all the new troubles and dissensions that have occurred in our country of New France, more especially since we have clearly and strongly given you to understand that your sole care should be to maintain harmony and peace among all our subjects dwelling therein. We have examined with care the contents of all the dispatches which you have written us during the last year; and as the matters of which they treat are sufficiently ample, including dissensions almost universal among those whose duty it is to preserve harmony in the country under your command, we have weighed both sides and have this only to say to you: Consider well that, if it is any advantage or any satisfaction to you that we should be satisfied with your services, it is necessary that you change entirely the conduct which you have hitherto pursued."

During the reading Duchesneau's face gleamed with pleasure, while that portion of the council that sided with him (Anteuil the attorney general, Villiray and Tilly) exchanged glances of hearty satisfaction. Fontenac's wrath was greatly augmented at this public rebuke from the king, but he only commanded in a sharp tone that the secretary proceed with the reading.

"As for you, M. l'intendant, we have examined all the letters, papers and memorials that you sent us; and though it appears by the letters of M. de Fontenac that this conduct leaves something to be desired, there is assuredly far more to be desired in you than in him. As to what blame is yours, then, in his, as to what you allege against him, we have written him a warning already. But since in many of your complaints you say that things which are without foundation, or which are of concern of yours, it is difficult to believe that you act in the spirit which we demand; that is to say, without interest and without prejudice. If change does not appear in your conduct before next year, we shall keep you no longer in office."

It was now the turn of Fontenac and his adherents, who constituted a majority of the council, to rejoice. The governor smiled scornfully as he saw the color mount on Duchesneau's face during the reading of this sharp reproof.

The next business taken up was the reading of the draft of a resolution passed at the previous meeting of the council, which had been made out in terms agreeable to the governor.

"See that it be writ well and fair upon the records," said Fontenac. Then turning to Duchesneau, he continued: "If M. l'intendant's hand is steady enough, he can sign it now."

Duchesneau still smarting under the king's message, and disliking the tone of the governor, which amounted to a command, replied:

"If the council permit, I and the secretary will withdraw into the adjoining room where we can examine it in peace and enter it in proper form."

Fontenac blazed up at once. "And keep the governor and the council waiting? Ma foi! since when have we attended on your pleasure? Dame! sign it at once. I would have no security that the resolution would be accurately transcribed, did I not see it signed in my presence."

Stung to the quick, Duchesneau arose, and motioning to the secretary to follow him, seized the draft in his hand and made for the door. The governor, thunder-struck at his resistance, planted himself firmly before it and exclaimed passionately:

"Mordieu! you shall not leave the council chamber until you have signed the paper. After that I care not when you leave, nor how long you remain away, either."

"Then I shall get out of the window, or else stay here all night," retorted the intendant, obstinately.

"Peace, M. le Gouverneur, and you, M. l'intendant," said the bishop, who, although antagonistic to Fontenac, saw that Duchesneau had gone too far, "accede to his reasonable request."

The intendant looked about him sullenly, then approaching the table, signed the document, and turned to the governor, defiantly: "I withdraw my opposition," next addressing the council, "I crave leave, Messieurs, to read this communication that was handed me before entering."

So saying, he read a petition from one of the members of the council, D'Amours by name, whose chair was vacant. It stated that Fontenac had put him in prison, because, having obtained in due form a passport to send a canoe to his fishing-station at Matane, he had afterwards sent a sailor-boat thither without applying for another passport. The governor had sent for him and demanded by what right he did so. D'Amours replied that he believed he had acted in accordance with the intention of the king; whereupon "M. le Gouverneur fell into a rage and said to your petitioner, 'I will teach you the intentions of the king; and you shall stay in prison till you learn them; and your petitioner was shut up in a chamber of the Chateau, wherein he still remains and prays the honorable council that a trial be granted him according to law.'"

Duchesneau glanced vindictively at the governor whilst reading the petition, well knowing that it would act as a bomb-shell among the members of the council. He had no sooner finished than everything was in an uproar.

The partisans of Duchesneau were on their feet loudly clamoring for the release of their absent member, whilst others, friendly to the governor, vainly strove to pacify them in order to gain a hearing for him. The confusion increased, ink was spilled, documents tossed from the table, fists were raised in air, and faces distorted with passion. Above the din the voices of Anteuil, Tilly and Villiray were heard loudly calling for justice, saying that their own personal liberty was in danger and that they would fight against such tyranny.

Fontenac had risen with such violence as to send the high-backed chair crashing over on the floor. He stood defiantly facing the angry councillors. His anger choked him, his face and neck were purple with rage; the veins on his forehead stood out like great cords; his eyes streamed fire. At length he found utterance in speech as he heard the cries for justice and the words against tyranny. Striking with his huge fist upon the table, he bellowed "Silence!" and when he could be heard, continued:
